Persecution of homosexuals in Nazi Germany - Wikipedia
Before 1933, homosexual acts were illegal in Germany but the law was not consistently enforced and there was a thriving gay life in German cities. After the Nazi takeover in 1933, the first homosexual movement was shut down, publications were burned, and clubs frequented by homosexuals were shut down. Persecution accelerated after the Röhm purge as combatting...

Bureaucracy: while it seems well before the invention of cars, road networks were being built in parallel to railroads. Likewise, even though canals had been around since ancient times, in the twentieth century it would directly inspire Nazi ideology as well: Hitler himself cited Gobineau in his own musings on racial hierarchy.
